TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 13, 1900.

RICHMOND IN 1866 AND IN 1900. We have a copy of the Richmond Dispatch of May 11th, 1866, from which we take the following editorial paragraph:

"The citizens of Richmond are patriotic and liberal, but the war has impoverished them more fully, perhaps, than any other body of the Southern people. This community was for four dreadful years in the fierce center of the conflict, and upon it pore most heavily all the burdens, all the It was drained of its resources and of its vicorous manhood by every fresh necessity of the Confederacy, and all know how often those dire necessities aroseeach time more fearful and exacting in demands upon those who were ill able to bear the imposition. Yet how cagerly did Richmond respond, while she had the capacity, to every call for more money and for more men! Her record in this respect is noble and she has the consolation of knowing that she exhausted herself for a great though unfortunate cause. The crowning misfortune that almost made her a pauper in the land was the conflagration that occurred on the evacuation. Square after square, street after street were laid in ashes, and the property that might have been rescued from the devouring flames went to satiate the more pitlless and greedy appetite of wholesale pillage. It is then no miserly complaint that the citizens of Richmond are poor. What little means they have are devoted to the rebuilding of the desolated district." Few men of the prese ize what the distress and desolation of the city were at the time this article was written, but some faint idea of it may be had by reading the above extract from the pen of a writer who, at the time that he wrote, was looking out upon the burnt walls that stood as so many spectres. When we go out into that district now and see the substantial brick buildings there, and no trace whatever of the fire fiend, when we see the busy throngs on the streets, when we go farther up town and see the magnificent stores and the beautiful residences and evidences on every hand of progress and prosperity. then it is that we realize what Richmond has done within a period of thirty-five years. It is marvellous, It is encouraging. It is enough to make every Richmonder proud of his city; and prouder still of the brave men who could not only figh: in time of war, but could fight quite as callantly and heroically in time of peace. After all, it is the men, and not the location, that make a city. Richmond is eligibly located, and it possesses many natural advantages, but it would never have recovered from the terrible blow which it received during the war if its men had not been plucky and enterprising and intelligent and determined. Some of those same men are still here, thank God, and the younger ones are descendants largely of the men who passed through the flery ordeal and built up the walls of our desolated city. These men are going on to still greater achievements, and we believe that during the next several years Richmond will even surpass the splendid record which she has already nada.

The time is auspicious. Let us continue to pull together and work and advertise. Let us offer inducements to capitalists to come in, and let us offer inducements to those at home to develop. Let us keep up the fight that has been going on since the city was desolated by war, and there will be greater triumphs as we go forward.

BANNAISM.

The proposal to nominate Mark Hanna for the Presidency has not been taken seriously, and we do not believe that it will be. The people of this country will never consent to put a man like Mr. Hanna in the White House. Personally he may be all right. We know nothing about that, but politically he is all wrong Mr. Hanna cares very little for men except so far as he may use them for a purpose. He believes in government for the classes. He believes in militarism in politics. He tooks upon his party as an army and upon the members of his party as so many soldiers. He believes that it is the but the late of the seldier to obey orders and ask. It is said that General Buller in replyis that Fresident of ours," he said. "We no questions. He does not believe that the Individual citizen has any business to think for himself. He believes that every subor dinate should let his superior do his thinking for him. That is Hannnism pure and simple, and Hannaism has no place in a free government like ours.

General Mahone tried that sort of polities in Virginia. It succeeded for a little while, but soon there was a revolt and the organization went to pieces. Militarism, whether in politics or otherwise, can't succeed in this country.

THE LOVE OF GAIN.

Just before the election the Atlanta Constitution printed a dispatch from a New York correspondent in which he asserted that without a single exception the citizens of that city, and especially its business men, were both sordid and selfish. He declared that New Yorkers were so utterly lacking in patriotism that they would cheerfully bring about a monarchy if there was any money in it for them. He

Here the dollar is king. Not only is the dollar placed above the man, but the man, if he happens to live beyond the confines of this great city, is never thought of. Here there is unqualified and absolute de-votion to interests, not to principles; principle is never heard of save in the case of the principal of a debt when it be-comes due.

The New York Tribune reproduces these remarks of the Constitution's correspond ent with some very amiable comments, and it might have reminded the Constitution that a similar charge was recently brought against Atlanta in connection with the Confederate reunion which was held there several years ago. Certa'n Southern newspapers declared that Atlanta entertained the veterans in no spirit of love for the Confederate cause, but simply and solely for the business that was in it. Naturally the Atlanta papers were indignant at this charge, and it is strange that the Constitution should have permitted its correspondent to say much the same thing about New York.

It is not our purpose to go into any defense of the patriotism of the metropolis, but we submit a few remarks on another line. The recent Presidential campaign was largely a campaign on the part of the Atlanta Constitution and its associates against plutocracy so-called. Newspapers like the Constitution have tried during the past four or five years to make it annear that advocates of the gold standard were, first of all, money-lovers, and that they cared nothing for anything else, being willing to sacrifice the good of the whole people, and even the republic Itself, to their sordid desires. Every Democrat who refused to advocate free silver was put down as a money-loving plutocrat and a novice would have supposed that all the virtue in the country was in the ranks of the free silver party.

We are quite willing to concede that the advocates of free silver, the great majorlty of them at least, were honestly losses, all the evils of those trying times. Imistaken in their advocacy of that measure, but we claim also that the advocates of the gold standard, the great majority of them at least, were honestly right. The desire for gain is a human instinct. Some men desire money to such an extent that they are willing to work for it Others think that they should be enriched by legislation. But the desire is much the same in both classes, and because their methods differ, it will not do to say that the one class is altogether sordid and selffish and that the other class is altogether generous and patriotic.

FALSE IMPRESSIONS.

The proverb says "If you give a dog a bad name you had as well hang him."

A gentleman in this city, who is endeavoring to secure capital to develop a most prosperous industry in this State, that would add greatly to its taxable values and would give employment to many laborers, showed us the following letter he has received from the vice-president and cashier of one of the largest national banks in the Northwest:

"November 7th, 1900. "November 7th, 1990."

"Dear Sir,—I have your favor of the 3d instant, and, in reply beg to advise you that I had a promoter from New York here several days ago, and expect to take lunch with him to-day. I had your matter up with him, and when he learned it was in Viscolia by installaborate his hearts. in Virginia, he simply threw up his hands, claiming that there is something in the laws there that is not a protection to outsiders, and that his New York friends are of anxious to make investments in Vir-

This is the first intimation I have had that there is anything of that kind in your law, but it may be that we can disabuse his mind of these ideas. I will do what I can to straighten the matter out, and if there is any prospect of being able to do anything with him will advise.

"Yours truly." Now this is a perfectly genuine letter It was not written for effect or to forward any fad. It was written by a business man to a business man in relation to a business matter, from which each hopes to make gain, and states candidly and truthfully a condition with which he had been confronted. Any one can see this letter who will apply to The Times office.

It is vain for Virginians to protest that an impression of this sort does great injustice to Virginia and Virginians. The impression exists, and it is the impression which does us the harm. We are just as much injured by strangers believing things of this sort about us as we would be by the things themselves being facts instead of fancies.

This impression about us has grown out of the efforts made to repudiate our pubic debt and the seeming attachment of the State since to Bryanism and free silver. It has done us incalculable injury, and is hurting us every day now. Is it not time that the people of Virginia should realize that their true interests lie in the direction of having the world to believe that they are conservative and that they respect property rights, and have good and wise laws which they enforce, rather than to have it believe that they are revoutionary, reactionary, and given over to disorder, tumult and disregard for the ights of individuals? It seems to The Times that there is far more to be made out of the latter than out of the former course. There is no hostility in this State among the substantial people of the State to capital. Those who come here from the North, or from any other section, and invest their money will be encouraged and protected by the law, and we ought to make that fact so plain that no outsider will have any doubt about it. That was a pretty expensive sky-rocket Howard Gould ordered his valet to touch off. But then it was aimed high.

(By Associated Press.)

NASHVILLE, TENN., Nov. 12.—The arrest of T. P. Brady upon a Federal warrant, sworn out by F. O. Watts, cashler of the First National Bank, has stirred up a sensation in Nashville.

The firm of Connor & Brady, composed of J. H. Connor and T. P. Brady, wholesale grocers and liquor dealers, made an assignment to-dey, and the arrest of Brady followed. In this connection the disappearance last Juny of W. W. Lea, an individual book-keeper of the First National Bank, is explained.

The two are charged with collusion in defrauding-the bank of $44,000.

It appears that Book-keeper Lea left on his vacation July 15th last, and at the expiration of his two weeks' rest tailed to return to his desk. Lea had been a trusted employe of the institution for over twenty-two years, and his failure to return upon the date set caused little concern among the bank officials, but as the days rolled on without tidings from the missing book-keeper they began an investigation of his bank affairs.
